Who hasn't heard someone say, "Don't worry, I'm fine, I don't feel anything!"

And there you have it: our friends who suffer from migraines, fibromyalgia, insomnia, pain, tinnitus, anxiety, exhaustion... So happy to have cut short the conversation, and above all, the investigation with regard to the electromagnetic issue! They are not "hypersensitive", this oddity that characterizes us does not concern them. They are iPhonics, Androidics, and firmly intend to stay that way.

Do we suffer from radiation because our bodies are deficient, or because our biological warning functions in response to exposure to environmental toxics such as artificial ElectroMagnetic Fields are effective?

I propose introducing into our discussions a concept that characterizes "those who feel nothing" rather than those whose bodies fulfill their mission of alerting them to danger.

(Imagine a world where tap water had been replaced by whiskey. The first to get drunk and have a constant hangover would stop drinking before the others. The majority, who could hold their alcohol well, would laugh at them as hypersensitive and raise their glasses loudly... until the biological damage put them out of action for good.)

Let's continue to inform. So many people have been wandering aimlessly through the medical system for years without ever having had the opportunity to question their "SMART" habits...
